Dignity and autonomy are fundamental rights in Canada. They are rights protected by our Canadian constitution and proclaimed in various laws throughout the country. As we age, the ability to make our own decisions and preserve our independence can be challenged. With the aging population of Canadians, the incidence of elder abuse may be increasing.

Our elder law group is committed to enhancing the lives of people as they age and protecting vulnerable adults. When clients come to us, they have often been in distress for many months and are worried that someone is taking advantage of themselves or their loved ones.

As one of the largest groups in the province focused in this area of law, we offer adults and their children, spouses, family and friends:

- > Depth and breadth of expertise in all areas of elder law
- > Ability to act quickly and efficiently
- > Compassion
- > Tailored approach suited to your unique needs
- > Creative and cost-effective solutions
- > Flexible and seamless experience dealing with our team members
- > Referrals to doctors, housing experts or others to help navigate the "system"

Protection against elder abuse and exploitation is a core part of our practice. We assist clients in dealing with the Public Guardian and Trustee, the health authorities, the police and the courts. Our lawyers frequently act as counsel in matters regarding adult guardianship, the Patients Property Act, the Adult Guardianship Act and the Mental Health Act. Many of our cases have dealt with power of attorney abuse, mental capacity and consent, predatory marriage, medical and housing issues, joint tenancy, resulting trust, and fraudulent misappropriation of bank accounts and other assets.

While we often work to defuse the situation and negotiate a fair settlement out of court, our team is prepared to litigate a determination of the issues when necessary. Our lawyers are some of the most passionate advocates in the courtroom and sought-after authorities in the field. They have made significant contributions to various legal publications and industry organizations and are frequently invited to lecture at seminars.
